The first people of Hatteras Island lived on fish and shellfish. They also hunted and grew food. Later in time, they raised farm animals and grew gardens. Native Americans caught fish by gathering them into net traps. Then they would spear them. In time, more people moved to the island and continued to fish the waters. Mending fishing nets were done by men, women, and children. At first, fishermen didn't go out too far into the ocean. The ship-to-shore radio made it safer for fishermen to fish farther offshore. They caught tuna, mahi mahi, marlin and other kinds of fish. Today, people still fish for a living and for fun. Visitors come from far and wide to fish on Hatteras Island.
